Asia Pacific to Emerge Dominant on Account of Mass Patient Pool

Fortune Business Insights foresees the global diabetes treatment devices market to be dominated by Asia Pacific. This is likely to remain the same in the forecast duration as well owing to the rising geriatric population and their susceptibility towards various diseases especially diabetes and heart problems. In 2018, Asia Pacific generated a revenue of US$ 4,334.8 Mn owing to the increasing adoption of advanced insulin device for treating diabetes.

The American Diabetes Association published an article stating 60% people in Asia Pacific live with diabetes out of which one-half is registered by China and India together. The huge patient pool for diabetes is a major factor promoting growth of the global diabetes treatment device market in the coming years.

Rising healthcare Issues Related to Diabetes Encouraging People to Opt for Diabetic Treatment Equipment

As mentioned earlier, the rising prevalence of diabetic people around the world is a major driver for the diabetes treatment device market. This, coupled with advancement in technology and upgradation of existing devices used for diagnosing diabetes is also fueling its demand in the market. The rising healthcare expenditures for diabetes-related issues, especially in developing nations is propelling the demand for using diabetic equipment such as insulin pens and insulin pumps. This is further expected to drive the market in the coming years.

However, the market may face challenges, such as high cost of devices used for treating diabetes which may discourage people from opting these devices. In addition to that, the presence of traditional diabetes treatment methods such as regular allopathic medicines, restricted diet and others may also stop people from adopting the trial and testing methods of controlling diabetes. Furthermore, lack of reimbursement policies, especially in emerging nations may also hamper the market in the long run.
